

What's new

Edited by Chris Knapman

BACK TO BIKING BASICS

● Tomos mopeds are to be sold in the UK for the first time in 30 years, writes Leo Wilkinson.

The budget-priced motorbikes look much as they did when launched in 1954, and cost £1,395.

Tomos is based in Koper, Slovenia, and its mopeds were originally produced under licence for Steyr-Daimler-Puch. It has since produced a range of motorcycles and, as of 2004, parts for some BMW motorbikes. The Tomos Classic XL moped has a 49cc, two-stroke engine and a top speed of 28mph. It's available from various outlets including Motoden in Hackney, London.

George Dennison, Motoden founder, said: "It's an honour to have Tomos on board. It has such a great history and I'm delighted its mopeds are back in the UK."